James Eads How, leader of the world's army of 4,000,000 unemployed, known in the United States as the "millionaire tramp," arrived in the city yesterday after a futile attempt to get five flat cars from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to bring a delegation of 1,000 tramps to their convention here which convenes September 1. Despite the failure to get the free passage, How was not discouraged. The delegates will arrive in the city as scheduled, for there are many ways of travel for the hobos of the country.

"I was prepared for the refusal to grant us the flat cars," said How yesterday, "The delegates to the convention will have to walk now. Several prominent physicians of Baltimore, classmates of mine, have agreed to lead a regiment of 1,000 men on a march to Washington the day before the convention is called here."

The word has been spread over the country through the mysterious evenues employed by the American tramps that they are to assemble here isext Friday in the gratest demonstration of the unemployed since Coxey's little army nominious defeat at the hands of the parade and mass meeting on September 1, the opening day of the convention. But brave as were his words, there was no doubting that young Beattie was pretty badly worried. When prospective jurors were asked questions in which appeared the words "death," "electric chair," and "capital punishment," those chair, and capital punsament, those who sat facing him could observe a twitching of the muscles of his checks, a tightening of the chords in his throat, a gripping of his armchair. While he must keep silent and still, he is undoubtdly frightened.

must keep silent and still, he is undoubtedly frightened.

To-morrow morning the taking of testimony will begin as soon as court convenes. A coroner, to prove the "corpus delicit," and a doctor, to tell just how Louise Owen Beattle met her death by a gunshot wound, will be the early witnesses. Attorney Wendenberg, who herage of the case for the State, says his side will complete its testimony in two or at the outside three days. The defense will probably take a longer time. "Absence of motive," it is generally conceded, will be the defense. A great number of witnesses will say that Beattle and his wife lived most happly together, and the boy's lawyers will ask: "Why should be have killed her."

Cousins Meet in Jail.

Cousins Meet in Jail.

Young Henry Clay Beattle, the defendant, and his cousin, Paul Beattle, who confessed that he bought for Henry the shotgun with which the young wife was killed, met for the first time since their arrest this morning. It was in the cor-ridor of the Henrico County jail, in Rich-mond, where they have been confined. Henry was being taken jout to the motor car which brought him here; Paul was being exercised. Henry stopped, stared at his cousin without speaking, and con-tinued his gaze until Paul had to drop, his eyes.

at his causin without speaking, and continued his gaze until Paul had to drop his eyes.

There was a story, by the way, current during the day that Paul Beattio, who, with Bealah Binford, "the other woman," one of the star witnesses for the State, will tell much more at this trial than he did at the coroner's in quest; that he may even declare he has positive knowledge that his cousin Henry is guilty. But neither he nor the State's lawyers would say anything about his comming testimony.

For a moment, early to-day, it looked as though there might be no necessity of jurors, or of a trial. The young defendant was within a few seconds of death, while on his way out here from Richmond in a motor car.

In a heavily wooded section of Chesterfield County, the "courthouse road" runs across the tracks of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad. As the car ran up a little hill and around a sharp turn to cross those tracks, a special unseheduled train approached. The chauffeur lost his head while changing gwars and his car stopped still directly in the path of the oncoming train.
